FOREWORD

I AM VERY CONSCIOUS that this booklet does far less than justice to a subject of great importance at the present time. My only justification for undertaking the task of writing it at the request of the British Council is that for five years I devoted myself to the cause of education in the Army. I am deeply indebted to my colleague Directors of Education of the Admiralty and Air Ministry, Captain W. A. Bishop and Air Commodore A. H. Robson respectively, for assistance readily, as always, given, and to Captain W. J. Baxter and Group Captain I. B. Hart for Chapters Three and Five. The responsibility, however, for statements made is entirely mine and I can only hope that those sufficiently interested to read it will obtain some of the pleasure it gave me to write it. In addition to my own deficiencies as a writer the severe limitations of space have compelled me to omit much of interest and to deal with many important aspects of the work in a cursory manner.

My very grateful thanks are due to Majors E. Hampson, H. R. Wright and T. G. Exon for correcting the proofs.

CYRIL LLOYD
